

Highlights

- We investigate the sensitivity of geosimulation models to initial spatial conditions.
- We generate stylized population density grids.
- We assess the sensitivity of two classical agent-based models, Schelling's model and Sugarscape's model.
- Strong quantitative and qualitative effects of spatial initial conditions are shown for these models.